MemoriesOnTV serial number is without crackProject: PB-03-1-2 In a previous post ( we described the formation of a hydrothermal fluid-rock interaction where mineral-rich water is expelled from the fracture (outcrop in Figure 1). The amount of rock removed from the fracture depends on the rock's porosity and permeability. The fluids released are also mineral-rich and contain the mineral mixtures characteristic of the hydrothermal fluid. Here, we study a nearby fault within the main fracture and evaluate fluid-rock interactions in the fault. A highly fractured basement is eroding at a rate greater than the rate of groundwater discharge into the main fracture. These two events are linked via the inflow of hydrothermal fluid into the main fracture (Figure 1). A seismometer has been set up in the eastern side of the main fracture (Figure 2). Approximately 20 micrograms of rock are displaced daily in the fracture, a figure which suggests that mineral-rich water exits the fracture into the seismometer's focal zone. If the depth of the influx is on the order of 10 meters from the seismometer focal zone, 6d1f23a050
